8. Outsourcing

Vanguard may engage third parties, including affiliates and companies, to perform asset management activities. Vanguard will assist in the selection and monitoring of these third parties in traffic exercise the necessary care.

9. Investment Policies and Restrictions

9.1. Determination of the risk profile

The determination of the risk profile is based on a number of scenarios in which the customer decides he should know how much loss potential he would be willing to accept given different profit potentials. through the Answering the scenario-based questions, two parameters are determined that are used to determine the risk profile of the customer: risk tolerance and loss aversion. The customer is then one of five risk suggested and assigned to profiles. The customer's risk profile represents a parameter for determining the The client's investment strategy. The risk profile is used to determine target asset class weights based on to define an investment objective.

9.2. Management of the portfolios

- a. Model Portfolios and Fund Disclosures: Vanguard uses a model portfolio approach, in which all portfolios are put together from a selection of funds. The weight of the asset classes for each individual customer is based on the individual determined for the customer ellen investment strategy and the risk profile. Within the asset classes are the target weights of the funds contained is firmly defined and thus independent of the individual investment strategy of the customer.
- b. Rationale for fund selection: These funds were selected to take a risk position in different asset classes, which comes close to the global capital markets. This helps to allow clients to participate in the global average returns to participate in capital markets.
- c. Fund management related to reducing currency risk: those in the investment universe Funds earmarked for clients are traded in euros. Still, some of the Funds in the portfolio into securities denominated in foreign currencies, resulting in an exchange rate risk arises. This is the risk that foreign currencies will weaken over time fluctuate in value, causing the value of investments denominated in foreign currencies as well sways. Economic theory assumes that these fluctuations increase over time offset and in the long term little or no impact on the value of the portfolio to have. However, this may result in increased volatility in the value of the portfolio over shorter periods periods lead. At the same time, a risk position in foreign currencies enables an additional one Diversification for a portfolio. To achieve this diversification without undue exchange rate risk enable, the bond-based funds are treated in relation to exchange rate risks secures. Equities, which already show higher fluctuations in value compared to bonds, will not hedged to also benefit from foreign currency diversification.

i.e. Asset class weighting: The target asset class weighting is calculated based on the information provided by the respective customer is determined. Those from the customers to Vanguard information on the investment goal leads to the basic classification into one of the two models described below:

1. "Build wealth": The "build wealth" model pursues the goal of multiplication of the customer's assets. We recommend this model to customers who do not have a more specific model have an investment objective. The portfolios of these customers use a static investment strategy Target weighting of asset classes. This means that the target weight of the asset class sen is not adjusted over time by Vanguard. The target weight of the asset class Equities is between 20% and 100%, depending on the client's risk profile.
2. "Incremental Risk Reduction": This model aims to increase the likelihood that the Client will be able to achieve his investment objective. The goals with gradual risk reduction reduction are determined using the company's own so-called Vanguard Life Cycle Model (VLCM). here are the optimal target weights considering the potential returns and the risk of loss on the risk positions of the equity or bond based funds determined. In the "de-risking incremental" model, the weighting is by asset class not constant, but variable over time. This approach is still ahead of the attainment the customer's investment period, the probability of achieving the investment goal increase by gradually reducing positions in equities in riskier funds.

9.3. financial portfolio management

- a. Initial Balance of Deposits: After the client's admission, the client's money according to the investment strategy and the associated weighting of the asset classes in the ent speaking fund invested.
- b. Daily custody account monitoring: As part of asset management, the portfolios of the Customers checked daily (excluding weekends and holidays) to determine if Reallocations within the account are required. Reallocations may be necessary when the client makes a deposit into his account to be invested or because the Weighting of the asset classes in the customer's portfolio 5 percentage points or more of the specifications of the investment guidelines with regard to the target weighting. In these cases will be automatic Orders to buy and sell funds triggered by the weighting of asset classes in the Bring the customer's portfolio back to the target weighting according to the investment guidelines. This usually results in multiple fund transactions being made.
- c. Exceptions to the daily monitoring of depots: There are various circumstances under where customers' deposits are not checked on a given day. These include how aforementioned, weekends and holidays, as well as the days on which transactions carried out but not yet fully settled. If related transactions on a customer's securities account are still being processed, the securities account is excluded from daily monitoring. Daily monitoring resumes as soon as the depot runs out transactions were transacted. A deposit can also be disregarded for other reasons ben, e.g. B. because a depot has been blocked. In these cases, the depot will not be monitored until until the depot is unblocked.
